Controversial 'Superstring' Theory Captures Physicists' Imagination but Could Prove Impossible to Verify

May provide long-sought explanation of fundamental forces

By KIM McDONALD

THEORETICAL PHYSICISTS, who have been trying for nearly a century to explain all of nature's fundamental forces with a single tidy theory, think they may have finally come up with the ultimate theory of everything.

In the past two years, American, European, and Soviet physicists have made dramatic progress in perfecting mathematical equations that elegantly tie together concepts of space, time, and the forces in the universe. Their work has produced a rather startling and, to some physicists, seemingly convincing new view of nature.

According to their idea, the world is not, at its simplest level, composed of subatomic point-like particles, as scientists have maintained for decades. Instead, it is made up of tiny, one-dimensional elongations of energy called superstrings.

Flitting through the universe like wisps blowing in the wind, superstrings spin, curl, and wiggle in ways that correspond to the properties of the varied subatomic forms of matter. They can be looped or open-ended, squiggly or straight. They may also rotate, vibrate, and interact with one another by joining together or breaking apart.

Although far removed from everyday experience and even from the most powerful probes of experimental physics, the idea that nature at its most fundamental level is composed of superstrings has quickly captured the imagination of physicists around the world.

In recent years, hundreds of papers have been written on some aspect or another of superstring theory. Seminars on the subject now play to packed audiences at scientific meetings and on university campuses.

And in many physics departments, graduate students who not too long ago would have devoted their lives to working on some aspect of the "standard model"—which attempts to explain the interaction of what had been believed to be nature's most fundamental bits of matter, quarks and leptons—are focusing their attention on superstrings instead.

Some scientists, indeed, think superstrings have started something of a revolution in physics, unparalleled since Niels Bohr de-

States Called Key to College Gains for Minorities

Federal interest seen waning; many campus efforts stalled

By SCOTT JASCHIK

More and more state officials believe that the number of minority students who enroll in college—and eventually graduate—will not rise as long as the responsibility for helping them is left up to the federal government or individual campuses.

Instead, they say, state governments must develop new recruitment and scholarship programs for students from minority groups and pay more attention to whether the programs run by colleges actually help such students.

"The federal government is withdrawing its support for minority students," says William R. Dyson, a member of the Connecticut House of Representatives. "It decided that the states could do it.

"Whether we like it or not, states have to pick up the slack and start addressing these issues."

Statewide programs for minority-group students are not new. For more than a decade, 19 states under court orders to desegregate their higher-education systems have been submitting plans to federal courts and agencies to show their compliance with anti-discrimination laws.

In recent years, however, many Northern states—which have not had to worry about the threat of court orders—have

One-third more Asians were enrolled in U.S. colleges in 1984 than in 1980, according to new government figures. Changes for other minorities: blacks, down 3.3 per cent; Hispanics, up 12.1 per cent; American Indians, down 1.2 per cent; foreign students, up 8.9 per cent. Minority enrollments at more than 3,100 institutions are in a Fact-File beginning on Page 25.

Academics in South Africa Join in Battle Against Curbs on Free Flow of Ideas

By HELEN ZILLE

CAPE TOWN

South African academics are joining forces with publishers, writers, and journalists to resist all restrictions on the free flow of information and ideas in their country.

They have formed the Anti-Censorship Action Committee to oppose scores of South African laws that limit free expression, as well as the government's pervasive use of banning to proscribe publications it considers undesirable.

"The stimulus for joint action was provided by the sweeping censorship provisions introduced under the state of emergency," said Duncan Innes, an author and sociologist at the University of the Witwatersrand. "People involved in writing, publishing, and teaching began to realize what an inhibiting effect the emergency was having. It just got to the point where we felt the time had come to join forces and do something about it."

'People Are Censoring Themselves'

Although writers, publishers, and professors have suffered the effects of censorship for years, the problem was exacerbated by the vague and extremely broad definition of a "subversive statement" contained in the emergency declaration. It could be used to prohibit any criticism of or opposition to government action.

"The result has been that people are censoring themselves for fear of contravening the emergency regulations," said Mr. Innes.

The anti-censorship campaign received a major boost last week when Judge John Didcott of the Supreme Court of Natal province ruled that all or part of five of the six definitions of "subversive statements" in the emergency regulations were void because they were too vague.

Scholars, journalists, and publishers have faced a possible 10-year prison sentence for contravening the emergency restrictions, and the government has been empowered to impose heavy fines, seize copies of publications, and forbid their distribution.

Commenting on the wording of definitions of "subversive statements," Judge Didcott said he had tried in vain to understand the "jumble of words." Whoever

Racial and Ethnic Makeup of College and University Enrollments

The following tables show colleges' and universities' enrollments of American Indian, Asian, black, Hispanic, and white students, as well as foreign students, in fall 1984 and earlier years.

The figures were collected by the U.S. Department of Education, which gathers such data every two years for its Office for Civil Rights.

The full definitions of the racial and ethnic categories are as follows: American Indian or Alaskan native; Asian or Pacific islander; black, non-Hispanic; Hispanic; and white, non-Hispanic. The figures in those categories cover U.S. citizens and resident aliens. Foreign students include all non-resident aliens, regardless of their racial or ethnic background.

The national figures include students in the 50 states and the District of Columbia, and exclude those in Puerto Rico and other outlying areas.

The national totals are based on enrollment at about 3,300 colleges and universities. Because of underreporting and non-reporting of some data, total enrollments are slightly lower than figures appearing in other government statistical reports.

In the table of enrollment by institution, which omits about 200 colleges for which the government estimated data, the total enrollment is given in the first column and is followed by the percentages of students in each of the six categories. Because of rounding, the figures may not equal 100 per cent.

Campus Policies on Drug Use

Mr. Bennett's suggestion that campuses could solve their problems with drugs simply by telling students that there were to be no drugs on campus.

"I think it's terribly naïve and cavalier to challenge college presidents that they should tell the students before they arrive that there won't be drugs here," said Steven J. Nelson, director of student activities at Dartmouth College. "What does that mean? There are drugs here."

Educating students about the harmful effects of substance abuse can be the most important role for colleges, some administrators said.

"Telling people they can't do something isn't necessarily the solution. You need to educate them as to why they shouldn't be doing it," said Edward Hammond, vice-president for student affairs at the University of Louisville, who has worked as a consultant on drug and alcohol issues for more than 100 colleges.

He added, however, that drug-education programs on campuses must be linked with law-enforcement efforts. He suggested that campuses combat drug use by making students aware of the dangers of drugs; by punishing students who sell drugs on campus; and by counseling students who are caught using drugs—"giving them a second chance, and then, if they use drugs again, they can be punished.

"The point is for the university to protect students. Most students do not take drugs and do not want to take drugs. Therefore, universities should back them up unequivocally."

Seen as Predating College

Some administrators who supervise campus drug-abuse-prevention programs said that they supported Mr. Bennett's anti-drug effort but that he had unfairly blamed colleges and universities for a problem present throughout society.

A new federal study has found that the rate of drug use among college students is comparable to that for non-students in the same age groups (The Chronicle, July 16). "How does Bennett expect the colleges to be any cleaner than the rest of society?" asked Mr. Nelson of Dartmouth.

Most students with drug dependencies develop such problems before they enter college, said Ms. Chambers of the National Association for Student Personnel Administrators. High-school and junior-high-school administrators "need to be just as aware of this problem," she said.

Other administrators, however, said colleges ought to take primary responsibility for educating people about drugs.

"I do believe we have a special role to play as educational institutions, and we ought to be held to a higher standard on issues like this," said Art Sandeen, vice-president for student affairs at the University of Florida. "And that's what we hold ourselves to."

In his comments about drug abuse, Mr. Bennett made no specific proposals, except for the recommendation that college presidents write to returning students this summer.

He said last week that "in general" he would not support random drug testing on campuses. However, such testing might be needed "if you have a plague," he said.

"If your place is, as some students have told me, quote, awash with drugs, unquote, then maybe so. But only in extreme cases, and there, to quote Winston Churchill, 'I prefer the fire brigade to the fire.' "

Canadian Sports Funds Shifted to High-Performance Centers

OTTAWA

This country's amateur-sports authorities have told the Canadian Interuniversity Athletic Union that it must shift nearly 20 per cent of its budget from travel subsidies for teams to "high-performance centers" aimed at improving Canada's showing in international competition.

The change, which could have serious repercussions on many campuses, was originally scheduled to go into effect immediately. But Sport Canada, the amateur-sports governing body, agreed last week to the union's request for a one-year delay.

In recent years, the Canadian government's Ministry of Fitness and Amateur Sport, through Sport Canada, has provided about two-thirds of the budget of the C.I.A.U., which is the intercollegiate-athletics governing body for 45 Canadian universities. Since 1978, about a third of that allocation has been earmarked for a "travel-equalization fund," which has subsidized travel to regular-season competition, particularly for the geographically remote institutions in eastern and western Canada.

Last month, Sport Canada told the universities that this year $281,000 of its allocation of $1.2-million would be switched from travel equalization to high-performance projects.

"For quite some time now," Paul Dupré, Sport Canada's liaison to the C.I.A.U., said in an interview last week, "we have been telling the C.I.A.U. that paying for interprovincial sports activities below a national level is not part of the mandate and jurisdiction of Sport Canada."

Making the budget change, said Robert W. Pugh, executive director of the college association, will force changes in the way the C.I.A.U. operates its programs. But making the change immediately, he said, would have created serious logistical problems for many C.I.A.U. institutions. He said that some would have been forced immediately to change schedules or to drop programs.

"There had been rumors over the last few months that changes were coming, but we didn't know what they'd be," he said. "When they were completely disclosed, some schools had already made plans for the upcoming year."

In a letter sent last week to the athletic directors of member institutions, the C.I.A.U. said the association and Sport Canada had agreed to attempt "to develop an approach to the utilization of travel-subsidy moneys that would address the objectives of Sport Canada with respect to high performance while still addressing in a more modest manner the existing travel-subsidy needs."

In 1983, C.I.A.U. members agreed to support the government's "high-performance mandate," which has resulted in the setting up of centers, similar to the U. S. Olympic Committee's training centers, at several universities, in cooperation with national sports-governing bodies. Most of the 45 institutions reaffirmed that commitment in a poll this year.

Benefits of the association's involvement in high-performance projects, members said, include:

► Greater visibility for the association.

► A higher caliber of competition.

► The involvement of increased numbers of athletes and coaches in international competition.

► More money and facilities for campuses with training centers.

Those who have complained about the "high-performance mandate," however, argue:

► That it has exerted subtle pressure to produce higher-quality teams.

► That it encourages neglect of athletes not in high-performance programs and ignores college sport's primary, educational purpose.

► That it is producing a tiering effect as top athletes gravitate toward high-performance centers.

"There is a split within the group as to whether we should be involved in high-performance programs," the C.I.A.U.'s Mr. Pugh said. "The government is saying they feel their money should go to high performance. That doesn't force schools to have high-performance programs, but if they want the money . . ."

The six members of the Canada West Universities Athletic Association have argued that Sport Canada will harm its own goal of developing national teams if it weakens sports in the association, which provides over half of the national-team athletes who attend universities.

Bob Corran, athletic director at the University of Calgary, said the budget cuts would force his institution to eliminate some of its smaller sports programs.

In this fiscal year, the travel subsidy accounts for 12 per cent of Calgary's travel budget and about 5 per cent of its total sports budget, he said.

While informing C.I.A.U. institutions that the budget changes would be delayed one year, Sport Canada asked the C.I.A.U. to help direct some of the subsidy toward its high-performance swimming project.

NCAA Distributes $22-Million to Tournament Participants

MISSION, KAN.

The National Collegiate Athletic Association has paid $22,145,564 to the participating conferences and teams in its 1986 Division I men's basketball championship.

The money represents the institutions' 60-per-cent share of the net receipts of the championship. The N.C.A.A. retained most of the remaining $14.7-million.

Payment was calculated by how far teams advanced in the tournament:

► The 32 teams that lost in the first round earned $178,593 each.

► The 16 teams that lost in the second round earned $357,187 each.

► The eight teams that lost in the regional semifinals earned $535,780 each.

► The four teams that lost in the regional finals earned $714,373 each.

► The teams in the Final Four earned $892,866 each.

The Final Four this year were the University of Louisville, which won the championship, and Duke University, the University of Kansas, and Louisiana State University at Baton Rouge.

Except for three teams that are not affiliated with athletic conferences, the N.C.A.A. distributed funds to conferences, each of which has its own formula for dividing the proceeds among its members. It is estimated that about 90 per cent of the 284 Division I members will receive some money from the 1986 championship tournament.

The Atlantic Coast Conference, with six teams in the tournament, collected the most, $3,214,679. The Southeastern Conference, with four teams, received $2,857,492, while the Big Eight Conference, with five teams, got $2,143,119.

The 1986 championship set a new paid-attendance record of 499,704, far outdistancing the previous mark of 427,251 set in 1982.

Gross receipts for the 1986 championship increased 18.2 per cent over the previous year to a record $41,160,135. About 80 per cent of the money came from television, 18 per cent from ticket sales, and 2 per cent from other sources.

Here is how the funds were distributed:

Conferences

1. Atlantic Coast	$3,214,679
2. Southeastern	2,857,492

Prosecutor Says Maryland Coach Knew of Drug Use on Team

A Maryland prosecutor said last week that University of Maryland basketball coaches knew that a member of the team was using drugs.

The prosecutor, Prince George's County State's Attorney Arthur A. Marshall, Jr., is investigating the death of a Maryland basketball player, Len Bias, who suffered heart failure last month after ingesting cocaine. A grand jury begins hearing testimony in the case this week.

Among the more than 70 people subpoenaed to testify are Coach Charles G. (Lefty) Driesell and two players who were with Mr. Bias when he collapsed.

Mr. Marshall said last week that investigators had learned that Mr. Driesell was told twice last season that one player used drugs. Another player, he said, switched urine samples to avoid detection. He also said there was other evidence that basketball players had used chemical methods to alter drug-test results.

Bradley U. Put on Probation for Basketball Violations

The National Collegiate Athletic Association has placed Bradley University's men's basketball team on probation for two years for rule violations in the 1980-81 season.

As part of the probation, the team will be barred from post-season competition next season, and its coaching staff may not engage in off-campus recruiting for one year.

The N.C.A.A.'s committee on infractions found that one unnamed basketball player had been given improper inducements to play at Bradley and received extra benefits while there. The player's parents were given free transportation, accommodations, meals, and installation of a telephone in their home; a job was arranged for his father; free transportation was provided for his fiancée; and he had free use of automobiles.

The committee also found that Bradley's head coach, Dick Versace, had deceived N.C.A.A. investigators.

Mr. Versace's contract with Bradley was renewed for one year on the same day the university was informed of the N.C.A.A.'s decision, but President Martin G. Abegg also announced that the contract would not be renewed again.

Mr. Abegg said in an interview, "I tried to look at a number of factors. One was the impact of the penalties on the current players, who really were not a part of this thing. I also thought we ought to expect the current coach to help us work out of the problem that he created. To bring in a new coach to operate under existing penalties seemed unfair."

Proposals to Curb Season Length Seen Unlikely at NCAA Meeting

The National Collegiate Athletic Association panel looking into ways to restrict the time that college athletes devote to sports appears unlikely to propose new limits at next January's association convention.

Wilford S. Bailey, N.C.A.A. secretary-treasurer, who chairs the panel, said last week that his committee's first session here this month was, "in large part, a planning meeting."

Because the season length, practice time, and number of games vary widely from one sport to another, Mr. Bailey said, it is almost impossible to develop an association-wide rule that is fair and equitable to players and teams in all sports. "It is really going to require a sport-by-sport evaluation," he said.

The committee will make a preliminary report to the N.C.A.A. council next month, Mr. Bailey said. But, he added, the panel's work is not likely to be completed until late spring 1987. Final recommendations will then be forwarded to the council and presidents' commission for the development of rules changes.

Among plans being considered for basketball is one that would delay the start of the season a month so that it would not interfere with first-semester final examinations. Now, the basketball season begins in late November. It is limited by N.C.A.A. rules to 28 games, but teams often play more than that because of tournaments and loopholes in the rules.

U. of Wisconsin Given Probation for Loans to Basketball Player

The National Collegiate Athletic Association has placed the men's basketball team at the University of Wisconsin at Madison on probation for two years for rules violations that took place in 1982.

The N.C.A.A.'s committee on infractions confirmed the findings of a university investigation completed earlier this year. It found that two boosters had given Cory Blackwell, who played at Madison from 1981 to 1984, two loans, of $3,114 and $1,900, to buy a car. The probe also found that the men's basketball coach, Steve Yoder, had known about the loans but failed to report them. The N.C.A.A. forbids such "extra benefits" to athletes.

After its own investigation, the university froze Mr. Yoder's salary and told him that his contract would not be extended beyond its expiration date in 1989.

Wisconsin forfeited 18 victories in which Mr. Blackwell played after receiving the loans. The university has also dissociated the boosters from the program.
